Broaching the Topic of Dementia How to Start the Conversation

"We kept dismissing my mother's progressing dementia as a 'senior moment.' Had we paid attention to the warning signs of the disease, we could have had conversations and started planning earlier." – Anonymous

Broaching the subject of dementia, or memory loss, can be a difficult and challenging task. Although it may seem easier to hide away from the issue, it is without question worth having the difficult conversation as soon as possible.

"There isn't one approach that is best for everyone – each situation is different and should be handled with that in mind," says Cheryl Demasi, Client Services Coordinator, Alzheimer Society of Manitoba. "It is in everyone's best interest to face the situation head on so you can find out the real cause of the symptoms."

"Try to choose your words carefully and let them know that you are raising these concerns because you care about them and want to offer support."

– Cheryl Demasi,
Client Services Coordinator,
Alzheimer Society of Manitoba

Becoming forgetful does not necessarily mean that someone has dementia. It can also be an indication of stress or depression. In rare cases, dementia-like symptoms can be caused by vitamin deficiencies or a brain tumour. Even if it is dementia, there is much that can be done after a diagnosis to support someone to live well in the community.

"Talk to the person and try to use non-judgemental language. Let them know that you're in this with them. They should feel encouraged and supported during the conversation," suggests Cheryl. "As difficult as this might be for you, it potentially is 10 times harder for them," she adds.

Consider whether you're the right person for the job. Is there someone else who the person might relate to or trust more than you? Be honest with yourself and try to remove your personal feelings from the situation. Perhaps they have already shared concerns about their memory changes with a friend – and that is who should have this talk.

Whoever has the conversation, make sure that it takes place in a relaxed setting, ideally somewhere private where you will not be interrupted. Pick a time when you won't feel rushed.

"Try to choose your words carefully and let them know that you are raising these concerns because you care about them and want to offer support. It can be helpful to use specific examples of some of the things you have noticed," Cheryl recommends. "Be prepared to listen and accept their viewpoint."

It may take a few conversations for the person to come around to the idea of discussing these concerns with a doctor. Give them time and remain positive. "I wish these situations could be more black and white, but that's not usually the case," says Cheryl. "Give us a call – we can help you figure out what might work best in your unique situation."

MAKE MEMORIES MATTER

LAWRENCE remembered

Read how one team is Making Memories Matter. Team captain Debra Berenhaut tells how her team, "Simkin Strollers," evolved over the last 14 years and how it all began through the love of one great man, Lawrence Singer. Debra's daughter (and team mate), Erin Armstrong, shares memories of her grandfather on her personal walk page. Tell your story, like Erin did, on your personal fundraising page on our website at alzheimer.mb.ca/wfa

Walking for Dad Fourteen Years on June 14th

This June 14th, Debra Berenhaut will participate in the Walk for Alzheimer's at The Forks in Winnipeg. It will be the fourteenth time that she has joined family and friends at the Walk to raise money for the Alzheimer Society in honour of her father, Lawrence Singer. Lawrence was diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease in 1999, and he passed away in 2014.

"Our participation in the Walk started with family – we called ourselves 'Singer's Sweeties,'" Debra explains. "Back then, my father was well enough to walk. My mother, sisters and all the grandkids and great-grandkids would come out to be part of it."

Seven years ago, the family team opened its membership to some people they consider very important: the staff at Simkin Centre, the care home where Lawrence lived after his disease progressed. "We now call ourselves 'Simkin Strollers,'" says Debra. "Participating together shows how we as a family appreciate the great care Dad received during his time at the Centre."

Soon after Lawrence was diagnosed, he joined a support group at the Alzheimer Society. While he was with the group, Debra's mother, Marsha, spent time volunteering in the office. Marsha also participated in a caregiver support group, which helped her to face the challenges of caregiving.

Participating together shows how we as a family appreciate the great care Dad received during his time at the Centre."

Debra Berenhaut

"These programs are very important, and so is trying to find a cure for this terrible disease," says Debra. "That's why we continue to participate in the Walk and raise money for the Alzheimer Society. Without donations, the Society would not be able to do this work and provide hope for families like ours."

Debra is thrilled with the way the Walk has grown. When her family first strolled in the Walk 14 years ago, there were less than 400 people participating. Today, over 1,200 supporters raise money with their teams, and they have a great time doing it.

This year, the Walk has a new brand: previously called Memory Walk, it is now known as Walk for Alzheimer's. Walk events will take place during June in communities across Manitoba and Canada. The Winnipeg Walk takes place on June 14th, kicking off at The Forks – Festival Stage.

"My father was a loving and giving man," says Debra. "We are happy to raise money for this cause in his honour." ★

How my Grandfather's Life has Become his Legacy

Erin Armstrong Remembers

Erin with Lawrence, her beloved Zadio Oshie.

Marsha and Lawrence

I want to take this story back to a different time. A time when Lawrence Singer was Zadio Oshie, or Osh as my grandmother would call him. A time when Alzheimer's disease and Lawrence Singer weren't always part of the same sentence.

Zadio Oshie was the man with the BIG smile, the BIGGER laugh and the BIGGEST heart. He had these fabulously funny sayings like "Honky Donkey" when you asked him how he was doing or "Wear it well" when you bought a new outfit or "Who sent for you?" when he answered the front door.

Zadio adored my grandmother, Bubby Marsha, from the day he met her at 19 years old until the day he passed away while holding her hand. Growing up we always witnessed their affection – holding hands, lots of kisses, his arms always around her.

Zadio's generosity was as big as his smile. His love for family, his god and humanity was central to everything he believed in. He was a man of quiet action: every night he put money in the pishka (a coin box that he gave to the synagogue). He volunteered time and money to Winnipeg Harvest. But to me, the most telling of Zadio's love and generosity was the money he always kept in his pocket to hand out to homeless people. Each day he would give until his pockets were empty.

I don't remember who you are, but I know that I love you."

Lawrence Singer

When his driver's license was revoked, he would get a ride to Winnipeg Harvest. When he could no longer manage his money, he would insist that my grandmother give money to the homeless people on the street. And when the time came that his memory faded and he couldn't remember my grandmother's name he said to her, "I don't remember who you are, but I know that I love you."

The disease continued to devastate my grandfather's memories for nearly 15 years. He deteriorated to the point where he could no longer walk, or speak or feed himself. When Zadio was admitted to the hospital with pneumonia on November 24th, 2014 (their 68th wedding anniversary) we all sat with him knowing he would never die on that day. He may not have been aware of the date, but he waited until the next day.

Since the time my grandfather was diagnosed, my entire family has invested time and money to support the Alzheimer Society and its efforts to find a cure for this horrible disease. I hate that he had to suffer for so many years and I hate that the people who loved him had to watch as he became a shell of the man he had once been. That is why I choose to focus on all of the wonderful memories that I have of him before Alzheimer's disease became part of the same sentence as Lawrence Singer. I also choose to honour his goodness, his kindness and his generosity by helping maintain his legacy through donations and support of the Alzheimer Society.

Thank you for supporting my journey to fight Alzheimer's disease by supporting the Simkin Strollers, and the other dedicated teams of walkers, in the Walk for Alzheimer's this June. ★ can be made by the person, their family or by a friend.

While Home Care works for some, people with dementia and their caregivers may find themselves needing more care than what is available through the program. At that time, supported living is an option. Living in a supported environment is a way for people to maintain independence while simultaneously having enhanced personal safety, readily available social interaction, as well as basic amenities, such as community dining rooms, housekeeping and help with laundry.

Supports to Seniors in Group Living

The Supports to Seniors in Group Living model offers enhanced supports within designated seniors housing. The goal of this no charge service is to help people remain as independent as possible for as long as possible. Services include help with arranging transportation and appointments, as well as social activities and expanded congregate meal programs.

and appointments, as well as social activities and expanded congregate meal programs.

Supportive Housing

Supportive housing is an option for seniors who need 24-hour support and supervision, but do not yet need an intensive level of care. In this arrangement, a person lives in a secure apartment setting while having additional personal support services. Things like rent, meals, laundry and housekeeping are paid for by the individual while all personal care is funded through their regional health authority.

Personal Care Home

As the disease advances, a personal care home may become the best – and safest – option. Personal care homes provide 24-hour nursing care and are intended for people with significant cognitive or physical deterioration.*

Deciding where to make your home is a big decision. As your housing needs change, you may ask yourself – do I stay in my house or downsize to a condo? Should I buy or rent? If I have kids, do I inquire about living with them? There are many factors to take into consideration.

Now imagine how much harder the decision becomes if you or your partner has Alzheimer's disease or another dementia.

Staying in Your Current Residence

For those who wish to stay in their own homes, accessing the Manitoba Home Care Program and other community resources may facilitate your choice. Home Care is provided through Regional Health Authorities in Manitoba. It is available to Manitobans of all ages based on assessed needs and the other resources individuals and families may have. Deciding where and how to live is a big decision – one best made by knowing the details of all available services. Leave a Legacy: Plan Your Gift

Each year, people receive life-changing assistance from the Alzheimer Society of Manitoba. Some of these individuals are people who are living with dementia. Others are family caregivers and friends who provide support to the person affected.

As a non-profit organization, the Alzheimer Society absolutely depends on its donors. In 2015-2016, the government provided approximately 15% of our budget, and we must raise the rest through donations or fundraising. Without our donors, the Society would be unable to offer the programs and services that are so valuable to those in need.

Anyone can enrich the lives of those struggling with dementia by becoming a donor. Planned giving allows you to make a future gift to the Society in a way that will have minimum impact on your current income while allowing you to obtain tax and estate benefits.

PLANNED GIVING OPTIONS

A Gift in Your Will: The truth is, you don't have to be rich to leave a bequest. Even a donation of a modest amount from your estate can have a lasting impact on the Alzheimer Society's ability to continue providing services into the future.

Life Insurance: Did you know that you can buy a life insurance policy – as large or small as you like – with the Alzheimer Society as the beneficiary?

Gifts of RRSPs or RRIFs: You may want to consider leaving a gift of an RRSP or a RRIF (all or a percentage of) to the Alzheimer Society. This method of giving can provide a considerable tax benefit because it reduces the taxable income that will be owed on your estate.

These giving options are only a few of the many you may want to consider. Others include annuities, charitable remainder of trusts, and gifts in memory of a loved one or in honour of someone. You can also give cash or a gift of securities.

To investigate the best option for your circumstances, check with a financial advisor, who will help you to understand the tax implications for your individual situation.

The truth is, you don't have to be rich to leave a legacy.

Whatever the amount and method you decide on, your gift is greatly appreciated and will improve the lives of those affected by dementia. ★

CEO's Message Dementia Care: A Priority for Manitobans

Wendy Schettler, CEO

The election of a new government on April 19 brings a fresh opportunity to build relationships and ensure elected officials know that dementia care issues are a priority for all Manitobans.

It is imperative that the provincial government take the lead and provide the health and support services desperately needed by over 22,000 Manitobans with Alzheimer's disease or another dementia.

During our election advocacy, the Alzheimer Society asked that the future Government of Manitoba commit to three key actions: 1) create a more dementia aware, inclusive community; 2) support community dwelling people with dementia to enable them to age in place; and 3) commit to developing long term care settings that reflect current and emerging best practice in built environments and person-centred care.

Better awareness and education are key to building communities that are supportive of people with dementia and their families. We call on the government to promote awareness of both the warning signs of dementia and preventative brain health strategies. We also ask them to take leadership in building dementia-friendly communities.

We need to empower those who want to stay in their home or community of choice with enhanced Home Care, more flexible respite and a range of affordable housing options. These services must consider the needs and well-being of family care partners who are so crucial in the lives of people with dementia.

We can and must hold each other accountable. We must work together. It's the only way forward.

Planning, building and refitting personal care home spaces is no small task. We understand this. Without planning today and making action time lines, we risk being ill-prepared when the future need is greatest. Plans must also prioritize the training and on-going education of a person-centred health workforce equipped to support people with dementia throughout the progression of their disease.

The Alzheimer Society will continue to work hard to do its part. We will grow our support and education programs. We will strive to increase the investment we make in research. And we will advocate on behalf of those impacted by dementia.

And then there's you – friends, neighbours, community and business leaders who know people living with dementia. We need your help to build a community that supports those impacted by dementia. We need you to remind our newly elected government that people with dementia and their families matter. We count on you to let them know that they need to implement change.

We can and must hold each other accountable. Addressing dementia and taking care of those affected by this disease is the responsibility of all Manitobans. We must work together. It's the only way forward.

QUESTION:

I'm named "Attorney" for my parent. Now what do I do?

Ask an Expert

A Power of Attorney (PoA) is a legal document in which one person (called the Donor) gives authority to another person (called the Attorney) to manage some or all of the Donor's financial affairs. It is recommended that everyone have a PoA, but knowing when and how to begin acting if you are the named Attorney can be difficult.

First it is important to know what powers the Donor has specified in the document. For example, not all Attorneys can sell property, and not all Attorneys can change investments, while others can do both. It is best practice that the Attorney be provided with a copy of the PoA (preferably certified) or the original PoA so that the responsibilities are known and understood.

But when should the Attorney begin to act? If the PoA addresses this issue, then the Attorney should begin to act when the event specified in the PoA occurs. If an event is not specified, then knowing when to start your responsibilities can vary with the needs of the Donor.

Ideally, the Attorney can begin to act or co-act while the Donor (owner of the account) is still competent to manage some or all of their own affairs. It might involve the Donor and the Attorney going to the financial institution together, meeting the manager, discussing the various holdings that the Donor has and becoming a signatory on the account(s). Then, when the Attorney begins acting, the institution is ready to seamlessly transition from the account owner to the Attorney. This should be done at all institutions where the Donor has holdings. There is no need to make any accounts "joint." Accounts should always stay in the Donor's name.

The trickier part is if the Donor does not want to hand over their affairs to the Attorney. They may no longer understand their finances or may be making decisions which jeopardize their financial stability. If the Donor is losing competence, the Donor's doctor and lawyer are the Attorney's best resource. If, in the doctor's opinion, the individual is not capable of handling their finances or other affairs, it is time to act. If the Attorney is still uncertain, consult a lawyer and follow their advice. Now go to the financial institution with the PoA in hand and explain the situation.

It's important to involve the Donor in their affairs as much as possible for as long as possible. Work with the financial institution to implement strategies that will prevent misuse or abuse of the Donor's assets.

Being an Attorney is a responsible position. By carrying out the duties assigned to you in an honest and careful manner, you will be honouring the person who has placed their trust in you. ★
